Mark Sanderson is a renowned literary critic specialising in crime fiction. He writes for several papers, including The Evening Standard, The Sunday Times and The Observer and has a regular column in The Sunday Telegraph called The Literary Life. In 2002, his memoir, Wrong Door, about his lover's battle with terminal cancer was met with enormous critical acclaim.

His first work of crime fiction, set in the seedy underbelly of 1930s London, will be published by HarperCollins.
