Fiona Millar is one half of one of the most influential couples in British politics. For many years she was an advisor to Cherie Blair while her partner, Alastair Campbell, was Tony Blair's Director of Communications. Fiona is a well-known freelance journalist and commentator with a particular interest in education policy. She is Patron of Comprehensive Future and chair of the Family and Parenting Institute. Her first book The Secret World of the Working Mother looks at the experiences of women who have made the difficult journey from the school-gate to the office and, with Fiona's unique viewpoint, shows a route to achieve the elusive goal of work/life balance.

Fiona Millar lives in London with Alastair and their three children.
